These paintings are mostly views from our new home and nearby in the Capertee Valley.

After much deliberation over leaving our well connected lives atop the Blue Mountains, we decided to take the plunge to the valley, with views all around to our beloved blue and orange splashed mountains.

The challenges of off grid living, the need to paint with available light and a whole new change of priorities and focus forced a fresh perspective for these works. Having spent many years perched on the edges of cliff tops and painting what lay below, I now look upwards at the cliffs all around. It took some getting used to but I have absolutely fallen in love with our place and relish the changes each day.

We arrived last year at the end of a wet spring with the paddocks covered in wildflowers and singing with frogs. Long summer days ended in spectacular glowing sunsets. Autumn grasses and angophoras turned to rust, burnished tips ready for the approaching cold, then the frost's silvery blanket illuminated the contours of the land on those chilly winter mornings. The heavy white veils swirled and lifted, revealing crisp, clear skies. Now again, the wildflowers raise their bright heads, so welcome they are this Spring.
